The deputies of the Venetian provinces sent a representative to Anstria to investigate the situation, the former premier said, and the preparation of his report gave Italy time to prepare her defensive. The deputies are declared to have told the government that while maintaining a patriotic secrecy on the subject, they would pass their information to the opposition unless the necessary fortifications were undertaken. That attitude, Signor Luzzatti concludes, resulted in Italy placing herself in a position to make war on Austrian territory. Harry C.
